

The ticket will not be sold. It will be chosen.

A proposed new party, starting in Delhi, built on one idea: members, not leaders, choose every candidate — and corruption is treated as a reason for expulsion, not a cost of politics.

What the party stands for

Its foremost aim is a corruption-free India. It also aims to make India a developed nation by 2047, and to move reservation from caste to economic need, through lawful amendment of the Constitution.

Ten things that make it different

1. Members choose every candidate

Open online primaries with live debates. A candidate needs over 50% of the vote, or the top two face a run-off.

2. No ticket for sale, ever

Paying or taking money for a ticket voids the candidacy and means expulsion.

3. Wealth on the record

Every candidate publicly declares the assets of their whole family, every year in office.

4. Corrupt? Expelled

An independent Integrity Commission can expel members, even after they are elected, and the party pursues every lawful way to remove them from office.

5. Leader and ministers named first

The Chief Minister candidate and key ministers are named before polling, with minimum qualifications (e.g., a doctor for Health).

6. Support good ideas from any party

No opposing a bill just because a rival proposed it, and no disrupting the House.

7. Members decide the big questions

Members approve every alliance, write the manifesto and can recall office-bearers. Every promise is independently costed.

8. Every rupee in public

Donations shown within 7 days; monthly accounts and every payment over ₹10,000 on the website.

9. Power is spread out

Term limits, sitting MLAs face primaries again, a minister can't run the party, one-third of party bodies are women, and a youth wing has a vote.

10. Start small, do it properly

Begin in Delhi; move to other states one at a time.

How the party is organised

TIER 1

Members

Anyone on the electoral roll. Free basic membership, or ₹100 a year. Members vote in primaries.

TIER 2

Executive Members

Run the party and can contest primaries. ₹1,000 a month towards running costs, with a low-income option.

TIER 3

Advisory Councils

21 eminent citizens nationally and in each state. They advise and approve who may stand against published criteria, and can never contest.

What we would like from you

Please read this, and if you have time the full draft constitution, then reply with your honest answers. Criticism is more useful than praise.

1. What is your first reaction, in one line?
2. Which idea do you like most?
3. Which idea worries you most, and why?
4. Is anything unclear or hard to believe?
5. Is ₹1,000 a month for Executive Members fair, given the low-income option?
6. What do you think of reservation based on economic need instead of caste?
7. Should ministers have to meet minimum qualifications?
8. Would you join as a member? Would you ever stand in a primary?
9. Who else should see this? (Please ask before forwarding.)

This is an early, private draft shared with family and friends before a public consultation. Please don't post it on social media yet. The full draft constitution is available in English and Hindi on request.
